

TO RUN AUTO TIRES OVER SHARP SPIKES

Lee Company Will Put Its Product to Severe Test
Here.

To afford the car owner every due evidence that their tires can withstand every possible test, the Lee Company has secured the cooperation of their dealers throughout the country, and during the week of June 12, thousands of tire merchants who handle Lee tires will stage, so-called, "torture tests" as a nation-wide demonstration of the claim that Lee tires resist attempts to puncture them.

For this purpose, stoutly constructed runways, bristling with sharp, hardened metal points, will be employed. Automobiles equipped with Lee tires and loaded with passengers will mount these boards and unlock and lock forth upon hedgerows sharpened spikes. In full view of the public, on street corners and public squares, such demonstrations of what appears to be the supreme test of a tire will be given.

"We are arranging to do our bit in connection with this unique exhibition," says Frank G. Flecking, manager of the Richmond branch of the Lee Tire and Rubber Company.

NEW ERA DAWNS WITH JOHN SMITH'S COMING

(Continued From Sixth Page)

reputed campaigns which destroyed more than he commanded, and the brilliancy of his maneuvers, made him the typical highest official representations. In 1619, at New Kent, he grew up a sturdy youngster, and it was said that if doctors of New Kent had not depended on the Richardson family for a living, they would die in the poorhouse.

Was a Gallant Soldier.

During the rumblings throughout the country indications of the impending strife that was to tear asunder the people of the country, of Richmond, to which city his family had moved in 1619, when David was 10 years old. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare. He was wounded at the second battle of Massassas, but returned to the colors, and took part in many engagements up to Appomattox and April 9, 1665.

One of the great pleasures of Judge Richardson's life is to take part in the meetings of Lee Camp, Confederate Veterans. He misses few meetings, and is happy in discussing the trials and hardships and the honor of serving his country from 1622 to 1665. While he slept on his gun during the war, he did not permit the race of strife to prevent him continuing his studies, and in winter quarters pursued them under the tutelage of James Barden, a private and messmate who was a cultured gentleman and a scholar. At the close of the war, Davy entered the offices of Johnson and Gulden and began to study law. Facilities for advancement toward high achievement were crude in those days. There were no big fees and the members of the legal fraternity were never happier than "Men, we have fought through the world, I have done the best I could for you. My heart is too full to say more."

He refused a salary of $50,000 a year and, in civilian clothes, rode "Traveler" unaccompanied, to Washington College, where, as president of the college, he taught Southron boys how to live and think. Small wonder in the Capitol, Statuary Hall of Fame, Virginia's prettiest sons are linked together in that college—a great university now—for immortal twine round names of Washington and Lee.

Sold Duty to Yorktown.

The new State was won from the hands of "Scarpinot's" rule, to the satisfaction of all her doors. One rebel issued his wife, planted a crop and went back to the Yankees. If they ever came back he would whip 'em good. Crops were harvested and homes built. Distressed crops were re-sown, streams were dammed, factories and mills were built, mines opened and things began to hum. Banks flourished and started developments and nature smiled on the promised land.

Cuba was bleeding after the Spanish-American War, the boy in blue and gray General Pittsburg Lee, Virginian, was sent to help Cuba. Her feet and added another star to Columbia's crown of glory. In 1901 we celebrated the anniversary of Captain John Smith's arrival, which marked the final admission throughout the continent, as not a great success. A Virginian devised and installed the Federal Reserve Bank system to prevent repetition of such panics just in time to establish its tremendous worth when the world was cloudy burst.

Virginia's Great Day's Fall.

Again Virginia held out her call—men per capita answered from Virginia than from any other State, did they get there first? The Virginian in the White House did what he could, the people of the State did what they could, and not a trace is left of the camp and camps within her borders that can be said that Virginia is not worth fighting for.

The women of the State have ever been staunch supporters of the men war and in peace. The sunshine their smiles are reward and benediction to those found worthy. Modest, progressive, they are alert the times. One is even showing inland a trick or two.

No State is so blessed with uniform temperature, prosperous cities, varied industries, natural resources mine, forest and field, with intelligent, willing labor, and golden opportunities for brain and brawn as Virginia—the treasure vault of the South.

Known Throughout Universe.

It is the only State in which every road is solvent. Good roads are being built constantly. The school system is fast forcing to the front, holding the universities of the State known throughout the civilized world.

The faculty of this university, under the able leadership of an adopted Virginian (immunized long ago), show striking examples that greatness still seeks the man down in Virginia. It's in the air. As in war, so

Good Stock of Overland

Axle Shafts and Ring Gears on hand; also Flywheel Rings.

Ring Gears and Pinions and

Axle Shafts for all popular makes of cars. Out-of-town orders given prompt attention.

Va. Auto Gear and Parts Co.

504 West Broad Street, Phone Madison 2243.

Redford Auto Supply Co.

PENNSYLVANIA VACUUM-CUP TIRES

Accessories Vulcanizing

600 E. Main Street,

Randolph 440.

in peace. Reward to him who serves humanity or States. He also serves who only stands and waits."

For every man perfected from a child will spread the truths of freedom and of God.

JUDGE RICHARDSON HIGHLY ESTEEMED

(Continued from Sixth Page)

State and district history and development is proverbial.

David C. Richardson was born June 18, 1845, son of Turner Richardson and Ann Robertson Richardson. A son of the family of early settlers in New Kent, he grew up a sturdy youngster, and it was said that if doctors of New Kent had not had to depend on the Richardson family for a living, they would die in the poorhouse.

Was a Gallant Soldier.

During the rumblings throughout the country indications of the impending strife that was to tear asunder the people of the country, of Richmond, to which city his family had moved in 1619, when David was 10 years old. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood him well, and he was able to stand the hardships of active warfare.

He was a gallant soldier. After the roar of cannon had called the country to arms, young Richardson, on March 12, 1622, enlisted in Parker's Battalion and started his career as a soldier of the Confederacy. His gallantry was attested from the beginning; his strict training stood